1. A two month training course for reserve infantry officers of the Fourth Army, is given at Klana, near Rijeka. Captain K. Klancic is the Commanding Officer and Jovan Bezjak is the Political Commissar. Upon completion of the course the students must pass an examination or repeat the course. As of 15 April 1950, 14 classes had attended the school. Each class is composed of approximately five hundred and fifty members.
2. Students receive infantry, mortar, machine gun, anti-aircraft, automatic rifle, and communications training during the course. There is a separate company for each phase of training and six companies are called a battalion. The company commanders are regular Army lieutenants, and each company has one other regular Army second lieutenant or standard-bearer as a platoon leader. The remaining platoon and squad leaders are chosen from among the students.
3. The company commanders, platoon leaders, and a former regular Army major, "Pape" (Dad), who served on the General Staff Headquarters, are the instructors. The list of courses and instructors are as follows:
